

Iceland update - almost finished!

my 4×4 is rented and I am done with the planning portion of my trip! I need to get a few more things, such as my Thermarest sleeping bag mat and a new high lumen flashlight for some light painting but I will get to MEC/Sail over the next week! As you can see from the photos below, I finally got my new Fotodiox 145mm filter system for the ultra wide angle lens and my GoPro silver for diving in Silfra.... Although I did forget the micro SD card... I ordered two high speed cards but, alas, they won't be here for another week! I also plan to do a time lapse while driving but the main purpose of the GoPro is night time lapse with the northern lights in the background. Fingers crossed for clear skies and a lot of aurora activity! And while I still haven't gotten a new camera (GX8) I did break down and get the amazing Voigtlander 17.5mm f0.95 for some low light work. I'm still exploring the lens and getting used to full manual focusing, initial results are spectacular.

//edit - here is a link to a googleMap that I made of my points of interest

Source: <https://www.idonthaveacoolname.com/iceland-update-almost-finished/>