MidJourney… wow!

Diving into AI with ChatGPT is bad enough but midjourney really impressed me and kept me up into the small hours last night. Here are a few renderings. I will add the prompt below the images. I have been using ChatGPT to build prompts but simple declarative statements deliver some great results.

Speaking of ChatGPT, here is a good article in The Atlantic on the potential that ChatGPT will put white collar workers out of work. I will find a research paper that I worked on years ago looking at an Oxford study on the impact of AI on labour markets and link it here with my other older documents. I converted their probability tables (based on SOC occupations used in the UK) into NOC to see the potential impact on recent immigrants to Canada – spoiler alert – bad for telemarketers, not bad for drug rehabilitation counsellors.

Paper cut out inspired by Dante’s Inferno

Celtic Raven tattoo

Meditating on the nature of time under a tree floating in space

And this one just still has me shook. It was my very first image and I asked it to paint Cy Twombly’s peonies in the late style of Philip Guston. The shadow is what really amazed me as those who have read my essay will know.

Source: https://www.idonthaveacoolname.com/midjourney-wow/