

Montreal in Black and White

Montreal's architecture is a site where history and memory converge, with its blend of neoclassical, modernist, and postmodern structures reflecting the city's layered cultural narratives. In monochrome, the play of light and shadow accentuates this tension between past and present. Shadows here are not simply absence but a marker of time, revealing the subtle ways in which architecture both preserves and reinterprets the city's evolving identity and historical consciousness. And don't get me started about the food!

---

Source: <https://www.idonthaveacoolname.com/montreal-in-black-and-white/>

Images used in this blog post

---

