

My map of Iceland

I have arrived from flying all day. I met some nice folks along the way. I am quite tired but can't sleep. I have just unpacked my wool stuff from Iceland and am resisting importing and beginning to sort through my photos. That, and the 4K video from snorkeling at Silfra, will take some time.

Here is my map of Iceland as seen through artifacts that I collected. From the black smoothed rock from the Black Sands beach to porous volcanic stone from the thermal area around Myvatn. The clam shell is from the rocky shores of the south western peninsula and the sea shell is from the east fjords

Source: <https://www.idonthaveacoolname.com/my-map-of-iceland/>