Photography Courses

One of the benefits of being at home this week has been the ability to take advantage of Adobe's Creative Live and Lynda's Photography courses. I'm finishing up John Greengo's Fundamentals of Digital Photography. A great overview course that covers types of cameras, sensor size, light, and composition. A great course that was both instructive and good to salve some of my creative juices since I'm stuck here at home. This, plus Ben Long's Photography: Composition series at Lynda.com, has kept me busy the last few sleepless nights. I did try to do some macro work here but, alas, even that tuckered me out. Tough to be creative with a sinus headache.

I am still in the decision mode as to whether or not to upgrade my GH2. I'm not sure yet as to the upgrade to the GH3 (Choice 1), the new Nikon D7100 (Choice 2), or going straight to full frame with the D600 (Choice 3). Choice 4 is to stick with my GH2.

I'm still at sticking with my GH2 since I haven't any good reason, yet, to update my equipment…. although my upcoming trip to Rome is beginning to alter my decision!

Source: https://www.idonthaveacoolname.com/photography-courses/